 Wangfujing Street

Wangfujing is one of the famous local snack street and night market, located in Dongcheng District, Beijing, China. The majority of the main area is pedestrianised and very popular shopping place for both tourists and residents of the capital. Since the middle of the Ming Dynasty there have been commercial activities in this place. In the Qing Dynasty, ten aristocratic estates and princess residence were built here, soon after when a well full of sweet water was discovered, thereby giving the street its name "Wang Fu" (princely residence), "Jing" (well). Many exotic foods are served on Wangfujing snack street

 Forbidden city (Imperial Palace)

In the central heart of Beijing, the Forbidden City (Imperial Palace) remained the residence of the emperors for nearly five hundred years from the 15th century to the early 20th century and was the actual and symbolic seat of imperial power. Popularly known as the Forbidden City, it was built in the Ming Dynasty between the 4th and the 18th years of the Yongle period (1406 - 1420 AD). Many of the buildings of the Palace have been repaired and rebuilt, but their basic style and layout remain in their original state. This magnificent, palatial architectural complex covers an area of over 2,350,000 square feet and contains 9,999 rooms. The walls are pierced by four large gates, each with three openings and a broad crowning pavilion. The layout of the Forbidden City is based on a Chinese cosmic diagram of the universe that clearly defines the north-south and east-west axes. The buildings represent the largest and best-preserved examples of Chinese traditional architecture found today. Today, the Forbidden City is one of the world's foremost museums of Chinese art.

 The Tiananmen Square

The Tiananmen Square in the center of Beijing is said to be the biggest square in the world. It is 880 meters from north to south, and 500 meters from east to west, with total area of 440,000 square meters and can hold one million people. Tens of thousands of people visit daily. The Square is listed top among Beijing's 16 scenic spots. At the north end of the Square is Tiananmen Tower. Initially built in 1417 during the Ming Dynasty (1368 A.D. - 1644 A.D.), the Square was the front door of the Forbidden City. The most important use of it in the past was to declare in a big ceremony to the common people who became the emperor and who became the empress. Until 1911 when the last feudal kingdom was over, no one could enter the Tower except for the royal family and aristocrats. The granite Monument to the People's Heroes is just at the center of the Tiananmen Square. Built in 1952, it is the largest monument in China's history. The book 'The People's Heroes are Immortal written by Chairman Mao' is engraved on the monument. Eight unusually large relief sculptures show to the people the development of Chinese modern history. On a holiday, the whole square is covered with fresh flowers.

 The Summer Palace ***

The Summer Palace -- the royal garden, is located 10 kilometers to the northwest of Beijing and used to be a summer residence of Qing Dynasty emperors and is now a public park. It is an imperial garden famous for its architectural grandeur and gorgeous natural scenery. Construction of the Summer Palace started in 1750. The northern part of the Summer Palace is the 60-meter-tall Longevity Hill. Its southern part is a wide expanse of water called Kunming Lake. The Suzhou Street, 300 meters long, is lined with more than 60 shops and decorated with archways and gateways. The shops with different shapes and sizes are built with bluish gray tiles and bricks. The Summer Palace is the second largest imperial garden in China. Equally famous as the Forbidden City, the Summer Palace is called "Yiheyuan" (Garden of Nurtured Harmony) in Chinese. It is up to now the best preserved and the largest imperial gardens in China. You may regret it if you come to Beijing and miss visiting these gardens.

 The Great Wall

The Great Wall is one of the cultural heritages of China which is one of the most magnificent man-made projects in the world. It lies across the northern part of China like a great dragon winding its way through the vast territory of China stretching over 6000km. It is also the only human work that can be seen from the moon. The best point of view can be reached from near Beijing, like Badaling, Simatai, Jinshanling or Gubeikou. The northern part of the Great Wall in Beijing becomes the tourist spot which was reconstructed recently

Badaling Great Wall is located more than 70 kilometers northwest from the center of Beijing City and occupies a commanding and strategic position. Badaling is the best-preserved section of the Great Wall. For the purpose of defense, there are holes on the tip of the wall called watch-hole, and peepholes under the wall called embrasures. The wall is narrow on the top and broad on the bottom forming an adder-shape structure. This made the wall stands firmly on the rise and fall ridges. The wall was built with 10-14 rectangular slabs of stones surround its outside, filled with sand stones in the middle, and paved with square bricks on the top between the bricks were stuck with lime stones. The wall makes tidy, beautiful and firm because of that.
